

Polish-Prussian Mennonites Who Received Dutch Aid in 1735 and 1737

Glenn Penner (gpenner@uoguelph.ca)

Most of the world's Low-German Mennonite population experienced several disasters during the 1730s.* Unlike their Lutheran and Catholic neighbors, the Mennonites had a source of aid in the Fonds voor Buitenlandsche Nooden, which was a fund maintained by a Dutch relief organization for foreign needs, supported by most of the Dutch Mennonite congregations. The Dutch provided money and grain to the Polish-Prussian Mennonites. A key intermediary was Hans van Hoek, a member of the Frisian Mennonite congregation in Danzig. One of his duties was distributing money and grain sent from the Netherlands. Some of his distribution lists survive in the archives of the organization, now held by the Amsterdam Stadsarchief (Amsterdam City Archives).

Funds were accounted for in Dutch florins, also known as guilders. Grain was measured in Scheffel (pl. Scheffel). The Scheffel was a unit of dry volume measurement. Like many units of measurement during this period, the Scheffel differed not just from country to country or province to province, but even from one city to the next. The Prussian Scheffel was, at one time, equal to about 50 liters (about 1.4 US bushels).

These lists include those receiving aid who were members of the Frisian Mennonite congregations of Danzig, Montau (Schwetz region), Schoensee (Culm) and Nessau (Thorn).

* These disasters include expulsion from East Prussia by King Friederich Wilhelm I, extortion by the Bishop of Culm, the Russian invasion of 1734, and the floods of 1736 and 1737. These are written about elsewhere.
