

Weapons Confiscated from Russian Mennonites in 1914: Part 1

St. Petersburg Archives: Fond 821 Opis 133 Delo 322

Glenn H Penner (gpenner@uoguelph.ca)

The St. Petersburg archives contains a file (Fond 821 Opis 133 Delo 322) regarding the confiscation of weapons from Mennonites at the beginning of World War I. This file contains lists submitted from different parts of Russia of confiscated weapons. Geographical information varies tremendously from one submitted list to another. The original Russian location name has been directly transliterated. The exception is for the Molotschna colony, where village names are provided. I have converted those into the traditional German names familiar to Mennonite researchers. Otherwise I have made no attempt to identify the locations given in the list as well as individuals. I leave that up to the researchers who use this document. Since over 99% of the weapons in this list are firearms, I will use the terms firearms or guns, not weapons.

I have added the first column which shows the “standardized” name of the head of each household since the transliterated names may not be easily recognizable. Note that transliteration from Russian Cyrillic to English Latin script may cause some confusion. For example, the initial G may mean G or H and B may be B, V or W. The initial Y usually is a J in English.

Those who I believe were not Mennonite are highlighted in gray. Cells highlighted in yellow indicate that I am unsure of all or part of the person’s name.

A total of 1,992 locations where guns were confiscated are included. After taking into account the non-Mennonites and locations which were not households the number of Mennonite households from which guns were confiscated is about 1,850. This does not take into account any degree of duplication. The total number of weapons seized was 2350. Only 24 of these were daggers or sabres, the rest were guns of various types. Among these were about 600 handguns. The original text rarely distinguishes between rifles and smooth bore guns, so the word “gun” is used to designate any long gun, regardless of rifling. Where the original name of a firearm could not be determined, the direct transliterations are given instead.

For more information about what happened to the Russian Mennonites during the 1st World War see: Abraham Friesen’s book “In Defense of Privilege: Russian Mennonites and the State before and during World War I”.
